Joining Technologies for Lightweight Thermoplastic

The joining of polymeric matrix composites with microwave processing is new technological advancement in the field of joining. Earlier to this mechanical and adhesively bonded joints

Lecture 4: Microwave Joining of Polymer Matrix Composites

Custom-engineered functionally-specific properties leading to greatly enhanced design versatility have drawn designers to composites, but will make these materials-of-preference only if better ways can be found for producing better joints.

Joining Composite Materials and Structures: Some Thought

Joining of Composite Materials The purpose of the joint is to transfer loads from one member to another, or to create relative motion between two members.

Why Joining of Composites is important
Assembly account for 50% of manufacturing cost for composites.
The Achilles heels of composite structures are the joints.
“You can’t just go to a handbook and look up composites to get the right tools, right machine and processing procedures for joining the composites” like ...

Lecture 7.3: Joining of Polymer Matrix Composites Introduction

For instance, the term “FRP” (for Fiber Reinforced Plastic) usually indicates a thermosetting polyester matrix containing glass fibers 1 , and this particular composite has the lion's share of today's commercial market.
